

Only the Holy

I imagine for just a moment what would happen if a wave in the ocean began believing it was the whole ocean itself! It would become increasingly frustrated with its attempt to control its environment, not to mention the steadily mounting conflict it would have with all of the other waters that surround it.

Whenever any one part of us begins to act for the whole of us, whatever the nature of that part... be it intellectual, emotional, or physical (i.e., desire based)...

...Not only will the whole of us live in a state of (largely) unconscious conflict, but the dominating part itself—by nature of its ceaseless struggle with all the other parts—will begin to show signs of corruption...ultimately acting to impact and “infect” the whole.

This is why only being whole can answer the conflict and suffering we all experience in living (as we do) from a divided consciousness.

Only what is whole—that already dwells within us—can reveal whatever may imagine itself as being outside of the Holy. In its Light lives our hope.
