

Wordlessness Is Next to Godliness

*L*essons are not in books; never in words no matter how sublime.

All things wise, timeless, and true in life are realized through revelation-induced impressions...

...Where transient conditions serve as mirrors to the consciousness that receives and reflects them, not just illuminating and educating the soul to the celestial nature of its native gifts but—at the same time—elevating it above the illusion of a happenstance, conditional existence.

So it is that we are created to live in a silent “conversation thru revelation” wherein we find that this (order of) wordlessness is...a form of Godliness.

— Guy Finley