Find the Perfect Center of Life within You

Key Lesson: It is an eternal law: everything is always being changed, ceaselessly transformed into something else; but within us dwells the light of a Divine intelligence that is the unchanging center of all there is, or that ever will be.

Talk Takeaways

- We are presently cut off from the larger world that we're meant to be a part of.
- Whenever we think of what a larger world may be, we are only in the world of thought without knowing it. Our mind only knows how to imagine a larger world.
- The larger world is above us, beneath us, and awareness of above and below at the same time.
- Complaining about life is not the same as putting an end to the activity of the mind that doesn't want what it is experiencing.
- "To those who are awake, there is one ordered universe common (to all), whereas in sleep each man turns away (from this world) to one of his own." – Heraclitus
- It is possible to love your neighbor as yourself because there is a world that is common to all.

- Every last thing is being brought into balance, which is what creation is. As above, so below. In the common is the celestial.
- The center of the beauty that a person sees is within the person observing it. That center is everywhere and it is not a place. There can't be the experience of a center that is everywhere if there is something in you that is fixed.
- We are not intended to be the ones who balance our own lives.
- The feeling of pressure within us is the conflict of the two forces of wanting and not-wanting at the same time.
- Your life cannot come undone unless you get caught up in trying to ensure that you are the center of life.
- The center of all things is in the observer of all things.
- Anxiety and rushing are both part of a nature that is looking for balance. It does not see that it cannot create the balance that already exists.
- The center is that which unites the interior and the exterior.
- Use the feeling of imbalance to become aware of the balance that already exists.
- Creation is never-endingly being reconciled. Creation in passing time is chaos that is forever being brought into balance.
