Realize Perfect Strength by Never Forgetting these Two Fear-Busting Facts

Key Lesson #1: Fear of any weakness is a part of the weakness feared.

Key Lesson #2: The more we try to forget our weaknesses, the stronger they become.

Key Lesson #3: Everything created has a weakness until tested; it's what becomes of each and every such revelation that tells the story of whether or not new strength is gained, or its possibility is lost.

Key Lesson #4: What is true never stops reminding us of what remains within "us" that is yet to be reconciled, but we are deceived into believing that whatever darkness is revealed by the light is greater than the light that has revealed it. It is not.

Key Lesson #5: We cannot avoid any weakness we may have - let alone resist the condition that gives rise to its dreaded appearance - without strengthening the very same weakness we fear. All of which means the following: the only real weakness we have is our failure to enter whatever may be the struggle to prove our fears false!

Talk Takeaways

- We do not presently have any idea of what strength really is, despite how much we believe that we do understand.
- Because we do not know what real strength is, we do not know where to look for it. All we know to do is look for strength in our best ideas, which come from the past.
- Nobody knows about real strength because no one wants to investigate "their" weakness.
- We stop pursuing an imagined strength to come when we begin investigating the "weakness" that we presently avoid.
- Not one psychological fear belongs in your life.
- A negative state is caused by a dark imagining that the individual does not understand is playing out within him or her.
- The fear of tomorrow compromises us today. The thinker that imagines those tomorrows is the weakness. Only weakness imagines strength in a time of come.
- Judging others is a weakness that attempts to protect itself from weakness.
- When we judge another person or an event, it feels like strength, but the judge fears its own weakness. The consciousness that judges believes that it is superior to what it is judging.
- Until we understand our weakness, we are a servant to it.
- No weakness can appear within the real strength of revelation without being announced and its nature being revealed.

- Weakness is always being perfected by the strength that reveals it. "In my weakness is Thy strength made perfect." Anything that reveals a weakness is a friend.
- "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." -- New Testament
- Every weakness is the seed of a new strength whenever the weakness is revealed and understood. It isn't a weakness at all if you allow it to be completed by the strength that reveals it.
- We are deceived into believing that weakness (darkness) is greater than the strength (light) that reveals it.
