Find Personal Freedom in the Principles of Invisible Justice

Key Lesson: Only in a sustained conscious awareness of our (own) suffering are we awakened to see, and to know, accordingly, the healing presence of a Divine Light: a living, loving intelligence that reveals and conceives - all at once - the possibility of perfect compassion.

Talk Takeaways

- The only thing that sleeping human beings see are the reasons -- outside of themselves -- for their anxiety, anger, fear and negativity.
- It seems mandatory to have enemies because that nature feels as though everyone and everything is pressing-in on it.
- What we presently call love is dependent upon outside conditions giving us what we want.
- The real golden rule is: Don't do to others what you don't want done to you.
- YOU are the first to experience the pain that you want to inflict upon another human being.

- The more you think about other human beings, the more you suffer from your own thoughts.
- It is not your job to fix any other human being. And it's not your job to fix yourself, either.
- The more attention that you give to the pain of an unwanted experience, the more the pain escalates.
- You will never be free of another human being as long as you resist them, because resistance is fixation.
- Something in us believes that the capacity to judge ourselves proves that we are nothing like what we are judging.
- You can't know anything true about others until you know the truth of yourself.
- Everyone in the world is trying to extract the same things out of other people: consolation and confirmation.
- To "love your enemy" is to understand through direct observation that the suffering of another is the same as the suffering in you.
- The way to innocence is to see your identification with the parts in you that are not innocent, including that which always blames something outside of itself for its pain.
- The pain that you want to leave in the past is the source of your present suffering, because that pain tells you that there will be a time to come where you won't be in pain anymore.
- "Vengeance is mine saith the Lord" means that perfect justice is being meted out every moment, because every person's nature IS the life they experience.
