Talk Takeaways

- Most of us have agreed to settle for a life that is "not as bad as that other person's life."
- We presently set out on a search outside of ourselves to find a life without fear, not understanding that it is all an interior matter and that we do not have to go anywhere in order to find out for ourselves.
- In negative imagination we struggle to make real what is already real.
- We see and experience what our mind makes of the moment, never realizing that what the mind experiences is a shadow of reality with no substance.

- There is never a moment in which the interior world is not being stirred. There is never a moment in which we are not being given existence.
- What you see outside of yourself is a representation of what you are.
- There is either a limited awareness of experience. or the unlimited experience of awareness.
- "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." -- New Testament
- A shadow is a two-dimensional projection of a three-dimensional object. But the shadow lacks the qualities of the three-dimensional object.
- We presently believe that the shadow-world created by the mind is reality.
- There is a difference between the sensation of seeing and the actual experience of it.
- Life is always turning, turning, turning... but we do not see the turning because the mind gets stuck in identification with a static image.
- The moment that you are aware of yourself in three dimensions, you are transported into something timeless, a new order of awareness that is already complete and was there before your awareness of it.
- The timeless world is already complete, and you are intended to be completed within it.
- The divided consciousness doesn't want the expansive awareness of what is timeless because there is no "me" there trying to complete itself.
- Exercise: One, two, three... a timeless way to see. Shut or cover one eye and look out at your surroundings. Then uncover the eye and look with both eyes, changing the experience from a two-dimensional world into a three-dimensional world. Then as best you can, be aware of the experience of what you see in three dimensions.
