Remember this One Great Truth and Rise Above Any Form of Fear or Self-Doubt

First Key Lesson: Being in conscious relationship with what is Holy in life is only as possible as we are willing to see, and to be, accordingly, the whole of who and what we are in each moment.

Second Key Lesson: The heart of reality is the paradoxical fusion of no self and true Self. To that point, the truest sense of individuality is known only within the awareness of this seemingly Divine duality...the fertile void.

Third Key Lesson: Here's the most important thing to remember when finding yourself consumed in thought, in a mad rush: what you really want, what you're really after, is a quiet mind... a peaceable state of self that's reached only by realizing there is no place more empowering for you to be than in the present moment.

Talk Takeaways

- For things to change, familiar reactions need to be met with something different than what you usually meet them with. You are going to have to meet the moment with something that does not repeat itself.

- You are going to have to change that moment as you enter into it, not after it has happened.
- The Divine junction is the place where the Will of Heaven touches the will of earth.
- "And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." -- New Testament -- The lily is always being given what it needs to complete its role in creation. The lily does not need to seek for what it needs.
- If you do not change, your past will be your future.
- The nature of resistance itself seems to prove that you are not adequate to the moment. Resistance suggests that you need to struggle to find something more than what you already have.
- Why is it not enough to just be yourself right now? Why does it seem necessary that you have to find something outside of yourself in order to adequately meet the moment?
- The sense of inadequacy is born out of the endless comparison of who you are to who you imagine you should be. The process of comparison creates a sense of self that is in endless conflict, trying to prove itself.
- Instead of asking how to end the struggle to fulfill yourself, could it be that who you really are is already fulfilled?
- The whole movement of creation is the business of revealing and perfecting what is unfinished, the beginning of something new, endlessly.
- There is no moment in which nature isn't being completed. No creation can complete itself. Every creation requires the Creator in order to fulfill its role.
- The completion of something is the fulfillment of its possibilities. The past is what remains to be completed. Not the individual instances of past events that the thinker thinks about. Rather, it is the thinker itself that is the past.

- The whole of your past is the whole of your conditioning, which is incomplete, and which is waiting to be acted upon.
- The created world is the past, and it is incomplete. Creation is the present moment in which the Creator works to bring the past into perfection.
- What if it is actually true that God knows what you need before you do? What you need is the revelation and integration of the 'I' that resists what you need.
- Anything that you believe about yourself is a lie, because there is no real self that exists that needs to believe anything.
- God's wish is to be able to use His creation, your life, as an instrument in the process of the rebirth of life itself.
- Ask yourself: Am I enough, or am I not enough? If I believe I am not enough, then I am struggling to obtain what I believe I need. If I understand that I am already enough, then I am always given what I need.
